

Annie Elkin
Product Management
Individual Peer Feedback
Draped

Option 1 Feedback

Draped had a very clear problem space with a very specific and strong focus on cultural garments. It feels like a very differentiated problem at the user level. I loved the three defined user personas - Priya (creator), Aisha (optimizer), and Jade (guest). I thought they were well thought out and had clear distinct needs to use the product in their own way. Here are some recommendations I would consider for the final presentation.

I would consider what makes you unique compared to if a platform like Depop or Poshmark would just add a “cultural garments” category on their sites. I would focus on why it’s important for this to exist rather than that possibility because it’s not fully clear why it needs to be a standalone platform rather than a feature on an existing one. I think there is a clear reason, but you should make it more apparent. The question should be answering “if Depop launched tomorrow with this feature, why would users still choose Draped?” I think you can have a strong angle around trust and authenticity here that other apps don’t have.

I mentioned it in class, but I think it’s worthwhile going deeper into why each person would choose this platform. Specifically on the supply side, some clearer thinking on how to actually get the supply onto the platform because I’m not sure lower fees alone will be enough to drive that behavior. This could include a plan for acquiring the first 50 listings. I liked the idea of the community building and following of users of similar styles / sizes.

I really loved the personas and think there’s an opportunity to show the platform from each of their perspectives. Maybe explain their pain points a little bit more in like a customer journey and how this would map against that. This can help map to the MVP feature prioritizations as well. I noticed your Phase 1 of the roadmap was more around “validation” but I would push a little bit in maybe you could narrow it down to one persona or category and build out features for that rather than validating across the board. Or you could clearly state the MVP experience that each persona will have. I would be a little bit cautious about including AI/AR in your initial MVP or value prop because it takes a lot of capital, so you’d want to validate before that happens.